This is strengthened in this case by the agnomen, if, as is likely, despite the common occurrence of the name Epaphroditus in the Fam. Caes., it derives from the Epaphroditus (391) who was secretary a libellis under Nero and much later executed by Domitian in 95 (cf. Chantraine 312 no. 132).	Rome

But as Domitia survived till at least the late 120s, the date could easily be Trajanic or, indeed, Hadrianic. By this time the use of 'verna' in	Rome D H I N the status indication had also become more prevalent (Chantraine 170ff.; Weaver 51f.).

	The relationship between the two brothers, Successus and Antigonus, is complicated by the fact that, if they have the same mother, Successus, as a verna Caesaris, should have been born (and his mother have been) the slave of an emperor, whereas Antigonus as a slave of Domitia Augusta (or his mother) would, unusually, have been transferred out of the Fam. Caes., rather than the other way round (as Weaver 146). The most likely solution, (proposed by S. W Manning, Liverpool Classical Monthly 11.9, 1986, 151; cf. AE 1988, 16) is that they were half-brothers born of the same father but from different mothers, that of Antigonus being a slave of Domitia. Successus cannot be identified (as in AE 1988, 16) with his homonym in AE 1986, 68, whose wife is Pomponia Ingenuua, if that epitaph is dated, as is likely, to the Severan period.
